Adjunct Faculty Pool

The Heller School for Social Policy and Management invites applications for its adjunct faculty pool. Depending on the School's teaching requirements at any given time, some individuals in the pool may be asked to teach courses on a part-time basis. Main areas of teaching include management, sustainable development, international health, evaluation, environment, economics, statistics, and policy analysis.

Adjunct faculty members are typically distinguished practitioners or academics with concurrent professional careers. In most cases, they have successful teaching experience.

Since its founding as Brandeis University's first professional school in 1959, the Heller School has been committed to developing new knowledge and insights in the field of social policy and in health and human services management. Through the graduate education of students in five educational programs, pursuit of applied interdisciplinary research and active public engagement in both the public and private sectors, the Heller School is constantly examining policies and programs that respond to the changing needs of vulnerable individuals and social groups in our society.

The Heller School has pioneered in a variety of policy areas, including health; mental health; substance abuse; children, youth, and families; aging; international and community development; mental retardation and developmental disabilities; poverty and hunger; and work and inequalities.

Interested candidates should submit a CV and brief description of areas of expertise and courses that they might be interested in teaching to Kristen Stevens, The Heller School for Social Policy and Management, Brandeis University, 415 South Street, MS 035, Waltham MA 02454-9110, or by email to helleradjunct@brandeis.edu. Applications are accepted on an ongoing basis.

Brandeis University is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer. Women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.
