The Heller Global Collaborative combines the capabilities of four Heller School research entities, the Centers for Youth and Communities, Global Health and Development, Conflict Resolution and Coexistence, and Global Development and Sustainability. This interdisciplinary, multinational group is dedicated to advancing scholarship, applied research, training and capacity building worldwide with the overarching theme of global wellbeing. Specifically, the four international centers work together to build the institutions needed to: prepare for the demographic challenges of the 21st century—especially related to youth livelihoods and economic opportunity in Africa where 60% of the population is under 25 and the wellbeing, livelihoods, economic opportunity and peace is threatened for millions; support resilient communities responding to the human and environmental effects of climate change and conflict; facilitate inclusive and compassionate planning for effective poverty reduction and increased education, workforce development, and health services.
