

Applications are open for The Lurie Institute for Disability Policy Undergraduate Fellowship

The Lurie Institute Undergraduate Fellowship in Disability Policy provides an opportunity for Brandeis University undergraduate students with a strong interest in disability policy to develop research skills and expand their knowledge of disability policy. The goal of the fellowship program is to identify future researchers and offer them direct research training with established investigators currently working at the Lurie Institute for Disability Policy.

Application/Selection Process

Applications will be accepted starting early February 2023 from rising sophomores, juniors, and seniors. The submission of application materials will include a completed online application with a one-page statement of interest, resume, and your Brandeis transcript. A letter of recommendation from a Brandeis professor should be sent directly to aabushanab@brandeis.edu from the faculty member. Applications are due by March 31, 2023. Candidates from the total pool of applicants may be asked to interview with the Lurie Institute team. Selected students will be then chosen as undergraduate research fellows for the upcoming year; notification of acceptance will occur by mid April 2023.

Fellowship Opportunities/Outcomes

Fellows will be awarded a $4,000 stipend, and will be expected to work approximately 6-8 hours per week, during the 2023-2024 school year (September 2023- early May 2024), with Lurie Institute for Disability Policy senior researchers. Fellows will work with a Lurie mentor on ongoing research in disability policy at the Lurie Institute and will be expected to attend all-fellow workshops to complement the research. Fellows will have the opportunity to participate in local disability community events and may be able to attend a disability-related research conference and co-author a peer reviewed publication. Toward the conclusion of the fellowship, students will be expected to produce one opinion piece for publication in an online magazine/newspaper such as the Huffington Post related to the topic they have been studying, and to present their research to the Heller School for Social Policy and Brandeis community.

Your application should be proofread carefully, assembled according to the instructions provided, and submitted online by 11:59pm Friday, March 31, 2023. Late applications will not be considered.
