Students cannot double count courses for the degree; for example,

1. Cost-effectiveness is a required course in the MS program. Students are required to count this course only toward the MS degree. For the SID economics requirement, they will need to choose a separate option to fulfill this requirement. Students can take Cost-effectiveness either year they are in residence at Heller.
2. Intro to Planning & Implementation is a required course for the SID program. Students may take either the MS or SID section of this course, but it counts only toward the SID degree. It cannot be counted as an elective for the MS degree.
3. Monitoring & Evaluation is a required course for the SID program. Students may take either MS or SID section of this course, but it counts only toward the SID degree. Therefore, they need to take Research Methods during their MS year.
4. Economics: Students must take the two required MS economics courses—HS3349f and HS330f—and SID’s HS266f and an SID economics course from the list of required options.
